

Farming, Finance,
AND THE Global Marketplace

JUNE 8-9, 2010

Strong demand in the past decade for food, fiber and energy ushered in a new wave of prosperity for global agriculture. Robust profit opportunities were fleeting, however, as the global recession trimmed demand for agricultural products. Volatility in agricultural profits remains high, and producers' response to that volatility could reshape global agricultural production. In turn, these changes could alter the agricultural supply chain and agricultural financing.

The 2010 Regional Economic Symposium will bring banking and business leaders, government officials, and academia together to explore the forces shaping the profitability and structure of the agricultural marketplace in the 21st century.

Mark your calendar now. To request an invitation, please email 2010AgSymposium@kc.frb.org with your contact information.

JUNE 8-9, 2010
Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City
Kansas City, Missouri

